

SEE BITTER BREAK BETWEEN THE DIES, LA FOLLETTE GROUP

Dies Committee Hurls Charges; "Spying" Implications Dropped

MOSIER ANGERED

Dies Fights to Prevent Committee Taking Anti-Administration Aspect

By William S. Neal
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent
WASHINGTON, Aug. 19.—(INS)—In spite of peace efforts by Chairman Martin Dies (D) of Texas, a bitter break between the Dies House Un-American Activities and the LaFollette Senate Civil Liberties committees was threatened today.

With members of the Dies Committee hurling charges at LaFollette committee investigators, with implications of "spying" being dropped, it appeared doubtful that Dies could restrain his colleagues.

Rep. Mosier (D) of Ohio, member of the Dies Committee, exclaimed that "if they get funny I'll produce some matter on the LaFollette committee investigators that will blow them out of the water."

Mosier interrupted yesterday's hearing of the Dies committee to demand the reason for the presence of LaFollette committee investigators at the hearing. He demanded to know if "they are trying to hamstring this committee."

As the Dies Committee continued to delve into Communist and Nazi activities, there also was a possibility of a split in the committee itself. Dies fought to prevent the committee taking

Tells of Inter-County Hospitalization Plan

Inclement weather caused the meeting of the Rotary Club, scheduled for the lawn of Dr. H. D. Webb, to be held in the cafeteria of Fleetwings, Inc., yesterday. Lester D. Thorne, president, was in charge of the very well attended session which was addressed by James R. Mays, executive vice-president of the Inter-County Hospitalization Plan, Inc.

Mays, who was introduced by William B. Lange, manager of the plan, spoke on the accomplishments of the plan since its inception at Abington on April 1, 1937.

Since that time the membership has grown, according to Mays, to just short of 12,000, and over $40,000 in hospital bills have been paid for the members.

"Hospitals as well as business institutions felt the depression. But hospitals had no reserves built up, and people still continued to come to the hospitals. As a result the plan was started in Texas in 1929. In 1932 Mr. Mays introduced the plan in Elizabeth, N. J., and today this plan has over 25,000 members.

"There are now about 40 or 50 such plans in the United States," according to Mays. "Besides, there are several other plans in this country with a total of approximately 2,000,000 members."

The Inter-County plan, which is a non-profit, no dividend organization, excluded nobody. It pays the hospital bills of its members to the extent of $6.50 per day for the first 21 days and $1.50 per day for the next 49 days. Members are allowed to select any hospital they wish, and the bill will be paid. For a single person the cost is $10 per year. For a married couple the fee is $18 per year. With one child the fee is $21 and with more than 1 child the fee is $24, which is the maximum. There is one family in the Inter-County Plan which has 13 members. Each one of these members is entitled to the same services as a single person.

The Insurance Commissioner of Pennsylvania, under whose supervision the Plan operates, has required that a reserve of five cents per day per member be set up until the Plan has in cash that amount equal to taking care of every member for 1 day's hospitalization.

R. D. Lister, Morrisville Rotary Club, was a guest at the meeting. Both Mays and Lange are members of the Jenkintown Rotary Club.

FRANCE TO OUST ITALY FROM MAJORCA

French Army Chiefs Maintain Italian Occupation Would Place Empire in Jeopardy

MAY MEAN A WAR

By Kenneth T. Downs
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

PARIS, Aug. 19.—(INS)—If Italy attempts to retain control of Majorca after conclusion of the Spanish Civil War, it will mean an international war.

In language almost this plain, Premier Daladier and Foreign Minister Bonnet stated the case of France to Lord Halifax during their conversations at the time of the visit in Paris of King George VI. and Queen Elizabeth, International News Service learns from excellent diplomatic sources.

Not long before the royal visit, the "etat-major" of the French Army made a secret and forceful report to the Government. This report, based on the results of an exhaustive survey of military aspects of the exterior situation, said that France cannot under any circumstances allow occupation of any of the Balearics by a foreign power.

To permit continued occupation of Majorca by the Italians would be to place the French Empire and France herself in jeopardy, the Army chiefs stated.

No matter which Government happens to be "in" in France, when the Etat Major speaks it receives respectful consideration.

Thus, Daladier and Bonnet minced no words in stating their position to Lord Halifax. The British Foreign Minister expressed agreement with their views, pointing out that no real rapprochement between Italy and England can be envisaged before the withdrawal of Italy from Spain and the Balearics.

During recent weeks there have been the most disquieting rumors in both Paris and London that Mussolini has no intention of withdrawing from Spain, let alone the Balearics, after Franco's victory.

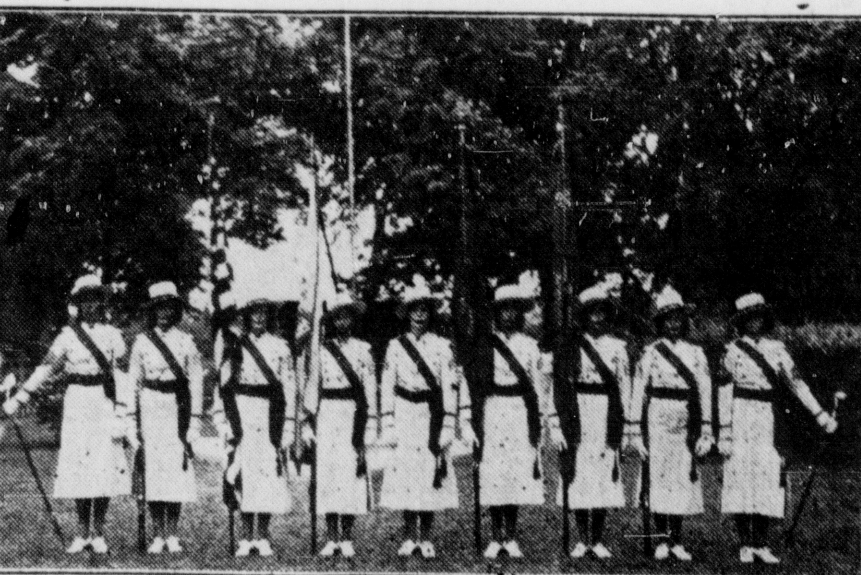

A story has persisted on both sides that an important Italian statesman, close to the Duce, let this slip to Lord Perth during a recent conversation.

If there is any truth in this story, it paints a gloomy picture for Europe during the coming year, in view of the firm position taken by representatives of the British and French governments. The French are not fooling about their lines of communication to Africa. If the day comes when they are believed seriously menaced, something is going to blow up.

Forrest Bailey Dies After Illness Lasting Three Years

A former resident of Bristol and a native of the borough, Forrest Bailey, son of the late Jonathan and Alice Bailey, was buried near Lowell, Mass., this week. Funeral services were held in Jersey City Monday evening.

The deceased died August 13th, after an illness extending over a period of three years. He was a native of Bristol and several years ago served as librarian in the First Baptist Sunday School.

The survivors are his wife, and three sisters, Miss Elizabeth F. Bailey, and Miss Harriet A. Bailey, Mulberry street, Bristol; and Mrs. Adell Huggs, Burlington, N. J.

Ladies of Yacht Club Honor Mrs. Horace Royer

The monthly meeting of Ladies of Anchor Yacht Club, was held last evening at the home of Mrs. Ronald Swain, Edgely. Business was followed by a "doggie" roast on the lawn. At this time a surprise miscellaneous shower was tendered Mrs. Horace Royer. The gifts were hidden about the lawn and she was requested to find them.

Those attending: Mrs. Robert Hendricks, Mrs. Walter Hendricks, Mrs. William Brown, Mrs. Gladys Hughes, Mrs. Ezra Price, Mrs. Horace Royer, the Misses Agnes Beaton, Anna Jeffries, Dorothy Hardy, Hannah Rockel, Bristol; Mrs. William Feaster, Bordentown, N. J.; Mrs. Ronald Swain, Edgely.

Better Drainage Needed

(By "The Stroller")
Motorists and pedestrians as well as wondering why the State Highway Department does not in some manner remedy the drainage conditions along Route 13, through Bristol Borough.

Every time there is a heavy rainfall, great quantities of water collect in the vicinity of Pond street and Lincoln avenue, and also on Pond street, above Walnut. Motorists unfamiliar with the condition hit the puddles and the water is thrown in all directions. Many marvel that accidents have not occurred.

Yesterday, and during a recent heavy rain, water was very deep, and in some instances reached the running-boards of the cars.

Republican "Curtain-Raiser" Opens

Harrisburg, Aug. 19.—The Republican "curtain raiser" to the Fall political campaign opened here today as delegates to the Young Republican State Convention waited a "key note" address from the party's standard bearer, GOP gubernatorial candidate, Judge Arthur H. James.

Although official opening of the Republican Fall campaign is set for September 10 when the Republican state committee will meet, Judge James was expected to outline tonight at a banquet in his honor, the party's position in the Fall campaign.

Other big guns in the Republican campaign were also scheduled to speak, among them United States Senator James J. Davis, national committee man G. Mason Owlett, Samuel S. Lewis and William S. Livengood.

The Democratic campaign will get under way August 27 at a statewide rally and picnic at Hershey, attended by the party's major Fall candidates and acclaimed 100,000 persons.

Fights Roosevelt

New York, Aug. 19.—Representative John J. O'Connor, chairman of the House rules committee, today launched a nation-wide campaign against President Roosevelt's attempt to obtain election of "yes men" to Congress.

The President's purge of Congressmen who oppose the New Deal is an "escalator to dictatorship," O'Connor predicted the purge would fall.

"What the American people are seriously concerned about at this very moment is this demand of the President's for only yes men in our parliament," O'Connor said. "They are asking each other: 'Well, what is the difference between that and having no legislative branch at all? Does it not lead inevitably to the same end—one-man government?'"

Here and There in Bucks County Towns

Isaac Belitzski, of the National Garment Company, purchased the first stamps, and a former postmaster, E. H. Sutterly, purchased the first money order at the new post office, in Morrisville, when it opened for business on Monday morning.

Morrisville Council this week accepted the resignation of Councilman Robert Walker, of Fourth Ward, but took no action to fill the vacancy.

It is expected that a successor may be appointed at the September session. Walker resigned because he moved from the ward.

Major Stanley W. Root, receiver of the Yardley National Bank, announced today that within a few weeks he expects to start distribution of a dividend of ten per cent to the depositors of the Yardley bank. This distribution will amount to $25,800, and will bring the total dividends to the depositors up to 90 per cent.

Major Root also announced that next month an auction will be held of all the real estate owned by the Yardley bank.

After the sale of the real estate, the receiver will sell at auction to the highest bidder all unpaid notes, judgments and claims of any nature whatsoever against debtors of the bank.

Dr. F. Harvey Grim, the oldest and most widely-known practicing physician in upper Bucks county, died at his home at Revere, Monday night.

Not appearing at breakfast time, as was his usual custom, his daughter-in-law, Mrs. Ida Grim, went to his room, where she found him dead. Dr. Koontz was summoned, but he pronounced the aged physician dead, and that he had died several hours before. Dr. Koontz said the veteran physician's heart condition had been aggravated by the intense heat.

ASK CONDEMNATION OF GERMAN-AMERICAN BUND

Calls for Expulsion of All Legionnaires Belonging To the Group

RESOLUTIONS DRAWN

SCRANTON, Aug. 19.—The American Legion, in state convention here, today was asked to adopt resolutions condemning the German-American Bund and calling for the expulsion of all Legionnaires belonging to it.

Convention awaited resolutions demanding:

1. Severance of diplomatic relations with the Hitler Government if a Federal investigation finds Nazi money finances the German-American Bund.

2. Dismissal from the Federal service of any official found guilty of the sensational charges of "Communism" developed by the Dies Committee now in session.

3. Expulsion from the American Legion of any member belonging to the Bund or other suspected propaganda organization.

Probe of the financial link between the Bund and Hitler's Pan-Germanism and the ruthless elimination from Governmental bureaus of any employee, no matter what his rank, tainted by "the subverters, the disease-carriers of un-American philosophy," both

Invite Public To Outing For Ambulance Fund Benefit

An outing sponsored by Bucks County Rescue Squad on Sunday, August 21st, will be a benefit affair for the ambulance fund.

The public is not only invited, but urged to attend this affair, and thus aid the squad which is doing so much for the people of Bucks County.

The outing will be on the property of Fred Grupp, Newportville Road, just off Bristol Pike, and will be conducted throughout Sunday afternoon and evening.

All kinds of sports will be indulged in, and lunch and refreshments will be sold. A small charge of admission will entitle those attending to participate in all of the sports program.

Firemen Recalled Numerous Times To Leonard Barn

Firemen of the Hulmeville and Newportville companies were recalled to the farm of Mrs. Anna Leonard, near Emille, on numerous occasions yesterday, to extinguish fires which broke out from time to time in a mass of hay, approximately 10 to 15 tons.

When lightning struck the afternoon previous the barn and quantities of crops were destroyed, the loss being placed at $10,000. Four men were struck by the bolt. The barn was almost totally destroyed, but the large quantity of hay remained on the main floor of the structure.

It was feared that the fire which occurred from time to time would destroy the barn floor, and the firemen were kept busy making trips to the site.

PLAN FOR PICNIC

The picnic to be given by the Lower Bucks County Council of Republican Women will be held Wednesday afternoon, August 24th, at Washington Crossing Park. Games and prizes will be among the features of the afternoon amusements. All members and their friends are invited to attend. Automobiles will leave Madison and Pond streets at one o'clock.

PICNIC TOMORROW

Anyone wishing to attend the Shepherd of Bethlehem picnic at Hunting Park, Philadelphia, tomorrow, will please be at 216 Cedar street not later than 1:30 p. m. There will be a small charge.

The squad members advise that they only give first aid, and do not substitute for a physician.

Firemen Erecting A Fire Station In Parkland

PARKLAND, Aug. 19.—Nearly two score members of Parkland Fire Company are busily engaged these days in erecting a fire station on Avenue D. The work has been in progress for about three weeks.

The men not only dug the foundation space, but are doing every portion of the building work. The structure is to measure 65x35 feet, and is being constructed of red brick, skid type.

The estimated value is $8,000.

BEQUEATHS SUM OF $15,000 TO RELIGION AND TO EDUCATION

THE NAZI WAR "GAMES"

Time and place are to be taken into account, if war "games" are to be regarded as merely the training of officers and troops in large-scale concentrations and movements. The time in Europe is one in which war fears have been rife for months. The place where the Nazi command-decree concentrates the German resources of motorized transport facilities lies on the French and Czechoslovakian border.

This first movement, the authoritative German spokesman says, is but a prelude to the annual games in which the regular troops and the reservists will participate throughout Germany. While in some British quarters, public opinion is counselled to accept the Nazi representations at their face value, the official British and French reaction naturally is the resort to intensified preparations.

As too frequently is true, these games also are a "demonstration." The danger is increased if an incident which, though it might not be deliberately caused, would involve hostilities and make real the immediate consequence of sham warfare. German resort to force against Czechoslovakia, certainly, it appears, would mean war by France and Great Britain against Nazi Germany and her Fascist ally, Italy.

Expressive though it is, the term "war games" is one with which we have no sympathy. Attacks at the most vulnerable points are imagined. A portion of the engaged forces plays the "enemy." "Battles" are fought and are counted as won or lost by the councils on which sit groups of the solitary master minds. The games are near the reality. The German first assemblage of from 500,000 to 1,000,000 men is distinguished from a mobilization, to average comprehension, with difficulty. The Nazi choice of time and place much too vividly conveys the impression of an expectation that the cannon and machine guns may not be fired only in the course of the annual German war games.

NEW STAMPS

When the hills come in these days, the average American is intrigued by the variety of three-cent stamps now being manufactured by the postoffice department in Washington.

It seems a person never receives two letters any more with the same species of stamp. The enterprise of the engravers on the public payroll in changing the appearance of stamps is appalling.

But everything else is changing and if the Government is going to issue a different kind of letter stamp every twenty-four hours there is little the average mortal can do about it except pine for the good old days when a two-cent stamp cost two cents and never changed.

Nature isn't so smart. She gives us brains to think with and then gives us prejudices to stop it.

With reservations, we ought all to be as happy as kings. The upward bound of the stock market marks the trend of something, and we wish we knew.

A condition has arisen in this country whereby engineers can't drain a marsh any more without leaving a World's Fair on it.

Add things we would gladly do without: Any kind of weather that is setting a new mark.

share the Christian belief, know that when the bruised and broken body of our friend could no longer function, her real self passed through the transition called death and by the consumption of God's plan, was clothed with a new body and began its eternal existence.

I wish it were possible to say the appropriate words that would alleviate the sufferings of the daughter who has been left behind. Only those of us who have passed through the sorrow caused by the death of a beloved mother can know the loss that now overwhelms the daughter's heart. Time alone can heal the wounds. As the years pass, the daughter will cherish more and more the memory of such a precious mother and will look forward to that time when she too will pass through that great transition and be reunited with her mother again. At this time we can only hope that in higher consolation she may find that comfort, cheer and support which weak humanity is unable to give.

Treasured in our minds will ever remain the memory of our departed friend and ever in our hearts the cords of love and hope will vibrate in notes of sweetest harmony, those words of cheer and comfort: "We shall meet again."

A FRIEND.

A TRIBUTE TO MRS. JOSEPH SMITH

Once in a great while the grim reaper, Death, is defeated in his designs, and instead of the usual consequent sorrow and bereavement, the beautiful life of the departed, the benignity of character, the kindness and loveliness of disposition, somehow assuage the grief and we thank God for giving us such a demonstration of the richness of a really noble life, so that we may treasure the memory and emulate the example.

Such an individual was Mrs. Caroline Smith, of Radcliffe street, who answered the summons Wednesday morning and passed on to that eternal existence beyond the grave. Those who knew her best, loved her for her kindness, her graciousness and her nobility of character. Always and everywhere she exhibited the same sweet disposition and impressed all with her uprightness, her cheerfulness and her good-will. She was a sincere Christian, a loving mother, a good neighbor and a respected citizen.

The Christian belief in a life beyond the grave is no longer enveloped in mystery. Neither can such a belief be characterized as a fantastic dream or an illustration of fallacious reasoning. To the contrary it is founded upon incontrovertible evidence. A doctor once told me that medical science today has come to realize that beyond all human efforts there is in evidence a mysterious and incomprehensible force actuated by order and method, which asserts itself as the learned and skilled physician stands powerless and impotent. This can be none other than God who created us and looks after his own even as a mother cares for her children.

And so we now look upon life and death with a more enlightened vision than ever before. Within each of us is a spiritual entity which is our real self. As we journey through life using the physical brain as a medium of communication with the physical world, this inner self undergoes the development which some by mistake associate with the physical body. When the time comes that the physical body is no longer able to function, then the separation takes place and this spiritual entity which is our real self, passes on to God, where it is clothed with a spiritual body and begins its eternal existence. This is what Paul the Apostle meant when he said "To be absent from the body, is to be present with the Lord." What a greater meaning the comforting words of the Bible give us as we look at life and death from this viewpoint. "In my Father's house are many mansions. I go to prepare a place for you." "For we know that when this earthly tabernacle is dissolved we have a building of God, a house not made by hands eternal in the heavens." So those of us who

"It's You I Want" by ALLENE CORLISS

CHAPTER XXI

Whitney went close to Tod, laid her hand on his arm. It was Sunday morning. Sunlight spilled across the worn carpet of the living room, across her polished brown brogues and yellow wool socks, across her brown tweed skirt and linen blouse, suitable for a Sunday in the country. "Listen, Tod, this my life. I've got to figure things out for myself."

"Sure you have. I just finished telling you something like that."

"I did as you wanted me to once because I thought you were right. But this time I'm going to do what I want to do."

"And who am I," said Tod, evenly, "to try and stop you?"

You are making me angry, Tod. You are making me lose my temper and I don't want to do that. She clenched her hands softly and said, rapidly: "I am coming back to Boston and I am going to see Scott whenever and wherever I want to."

"In other words, from now on you are going to be what the novelists refer to as a 'gallant lady' . . . well, may you live long and flourish like a green bay tree."

"Then . . . you are going to hate me . . ."

"Don't be a fool, Whit." Tod's voice suddenly young and flat, all the contempt gone from it, all the derisiveness wiped from his eyes. "No matter what you did I could never hate you. You ought to know that by this time."

Leave her quickly now. Say "Good-by, kid, keep your chin up and write me once in a while . . ."

and grin at her and walk out of the room and jump into that car that Matthews has waiting to take you to the station.

Whitney said: "Wait, Tod . . ."

But he had gone. She could hear the Ford as it rattled down the driveway. And then after a while she couldn't hear even that. Hester and the servants were at church. It was very quiet in Adam Prentice's old house.

Scott said: "No one could possibly object . . . you come back to Boston after being away for a year and a half and I meet you accidentally on Boylston Street at something to one o'clock and take you to lunch at my club. We are cousins and I have known you forever . . ."

Whitney unfastened the collar of her tweed coat, slid her arms out of its sleeves and smiled at him with her lips. Her eyes beneath the brim of her smoke-gray hat were unfathomable. If she had been uncertain two nights ago, if she had had a bad time with Tod yesterday morning, everything was all right now. She thought: "Fifteen months and Scott takes me to lunch in this quiet room and life has rhythm again . . . lovely significance."

She said: "It's a little frightening to think that you had not come out to the farm two nights ago I would not be here with you like this, today . . ."

"Two nights ago was . . . pretty perfect. Whit. Two nights ago was the best thing that has happened to me in months."

"Yes, I know."

Heavy maroon curtains at the window . . . why do men's clubs always have maroon curtains? Sunlight lying like liquid gold on whitened damask and Sheffield plate . . . and we did meet accidentally on Boylston Street . . . but no one would believe it, of course . . ."

Scott said: "Tell me about New York, Whit . . . tell me everything that has happened to you . . ."

"But nothing has happened to me, really . . . that is, nothing of importance . . ."

And saying this, she knew it was true. Yet so short a time as five days ago she had been willing to accept her life in New York as a permanent pattern for her future. Had thought that she was definitely finished with Boston and all those years of growing up and failing in love and being loved. Had thought that that part of her life was ended and another began.

But it seemed it wasn't.

You came back to Boston and you saw Scott again. And you realized suddenly that life wasn't divided into neat little squares which once lived through and left behind never caught up with you again. You learned that, on the contrary, it was a haphazard, absurdly undirected affair, in which nothing really began or really ended and in which you were never done with anything that was once a part of you . . .

Like Scott for instance.

Because any way you looked at it, Scott was a part of her life. For over a year she had tried to ignore this. To deny it. But in the end she had been defeated. There had been too many years, she supposed, when he had been the answer to everything. And they were the important years. The years when Whitney Prentice was being created. Because of him she had become the sort of person she was. With him she had shared certain moods and experiences . . . experiences too fragile and precious ever to be tracked down and rudely labeled. With him she had known first love.

With him she had known first love.

That explained it all, didn't it? That justified everything. Her being here with him today, for instance.

She said: "There really isn't much to tell you, Scott. Helena was pleasant to live with, I liked my job and I learned a lot about clothes and I'm an authority on smart places to dine and dance . . ."

Scott grinned. "You always knew a lot about clothes, darling . . . but who took you to the smart places to dine and dance . . . numerous young men or just one in particular?"

She said: "One in particular mostly. But he was in love with someone else. We sort of consoled each other, I suppose."

"But he did make love to you, of course?"

"Occasionally. It was indicated, I expect . . ."

"I've had some bad moments, Whit, imagining all the men who at one time or another must inevitably make love to you . . ."

"I know. I've had a few myself. Olivia is very lovely . . ."

"Don't, Whit. It won't do any good, you know."

"Sorry, Scott, but you started it. Her hands were trembling."

He said: "Don't tremble like that, darling. There is no need to, really. Everything is all right."

"Tod doesn't think so. He's terribly upset about things. We quarreled pretty badly about you in New York . . . and again yesterday morning . . ."

The brim of her hat cast a shadow across her eyes, her hands were quiet again.

Scott shrugged impatiently. "Tod is a Yankee, darling, and a Puritan. So long as I'm married to Olivia I am forbidden to you . . ."

Whitney bent her head. Now her mouth lay in shadow, too. Her voice was even, a little toneless. "Well, he's right. Isn't he, Scott? Didn't we both admit that Saturday night when we agreed when you said . . ."

She stopped suddenly, bright color staining her cheeks.

Scott was more courageous.

"When I said that if you would come back to Boston I would not make love to you in any way . . . that I would not forget that I was married to someone else?"

"Yes. You see, at heart, we're Puritans too, Scott. Always and forever."

"But even Puritans can lunch together without being tragic about it. Listen, Whit, we're both talking too much. We mustn't or we'll spoil everything. It's swell just being together. Let's not try to analyze our emotions . . . We like each other a lot and we like being together. Isn't that enough?"

"Yes. Yes, of course, it is."

That was what she had tried to make Tod understand. It was all really beautifully simple. She said suddenly: "He had no right to try to stop me, Scott . . . no one has any right to interfere in another person's life. What is right for you and me might be wrong for someone else. The formula can't possibly be the same for any two people . . ."

"Or any three people."

"You mean Olivia?"

"Yes. We may as well talk about her, Whit. Eventually we will have to, you know."

"Yes."

"I could ask her to divorce me, I suppose."

"But you don't want to?"

"I don't see how I can. It seems a cruel thing to do. This isn't her fault, you know. And it would leave her in an ignominious position . . . I've been over it a thousand times and in the end it always adds up the same . . . a divorce would crack her wide open, Whit. She couldn't take it. And there would be no peace, no happiness for you and me that way."

"No. I see that. I suppose I've seen it all the time. At least I've never once considered that as a way out . . . but for some time now I haven't thought there was a way out . . . I thought that I would stay in New York and almost never see you and eventually . . ."

"I know. Eventually we would stop loving each other. I've thought that too, of course. Only we didn't, Whit. So where does that leave us?"

"Back together again. We can manage this, can't we . . . I mean without its becoming cheap and common and unworthy of both of us? We've got to, Scott . . . or it will be worse than nothing . . . and Tod will be right and we will be wrong . . ."

Scott said: "Let's leave Tod out of it, darling. This is between you and me. It's our problem. Not his. He's being too damned officious."

"No. He's just being kind, really. He doesn't want to see me get hurt."

"You won't be, Whit. I promise you that. We'll play this thing through to the finish . . . clean and straight and above reproach. I won't ask you to do anything even Tod could object to . . . we won't even lunch together like this any more if you don't want to . . . it won't matter because all the time we'll both know that we've got something pretty special for each other . . ."

Something that belongs to just us. And when we do see each other it will be . . . marvelous . . . and it will make up for everything."

Listening to him, she believed him. It seemed that he was right. And she was reassured. She said: "We're two adult, intelligent people, Scott. In love with each other. Almost no one gets everything they want. The wise ones take what they can get, I suppose . . ."

"And make it count. That's what we'll do, Whit . . . we'll make it count terribly."

THE THREE BUDGETEERS

"Oh, dear," sighed the first, "I'm so tired.

I finally found out what I wanted, but I'm worn out."

"It's lovely," sighed the second, "but I paid more than I wanted to."

"It's easy," said the third. "I've been studying the advertisements for days, and I knew where to look for what I wanted —and how much I'd have to pay."

ON SCREENS IN BRISTOL

BRISTOL

For the first time in motion picture history, a dance has been filmed in its entirety, without breaks or cut-ins, and will be shown on the screen as actually photographed. The dance is the closing number, a seven-minute sequence, from the new Jessie Matthews musical, "Sailing Along," now playing at the Bristol Theatre.

Jack Whiting is Jessie's partner in the number, which actually consists of four dances in one. The camera, it is estimated, followed the dancing pair for more than a mile, as they change from a tap dance to a mime, then to a short dramatic ballet, and finished with an elaborate ensemble devised by Buddy Bradley, Gaumont dance director.

The set for this dance was so large that it had to be extended over two stages. To give a variety of camera angles to the shot, a specially constructed truck moved slowly up and down the studio, almost completely encircling the giant stages. Meanwhile, the camera was manipulated on the moving trucks, raised, lowered and swung about on its boom in accordance with hand signals given by the cameraman. There were 36 shifts during the first three minutes of the sequence.

Miss Matthews estimates that, including rehearsals, she and her dancing partner, Jack Whiting, American musical comedy star, danced more than 30 miles for the sequence. A mistake would have been well-nigh fatal, but the carefully rehearsed sequence went through like clockwork.

Glen MacWilliams was the chief cameraman, and originator of the novel procedure, with Frank Hodges at the controls. "Sailing Along" is a Gaumont production.

GRAND

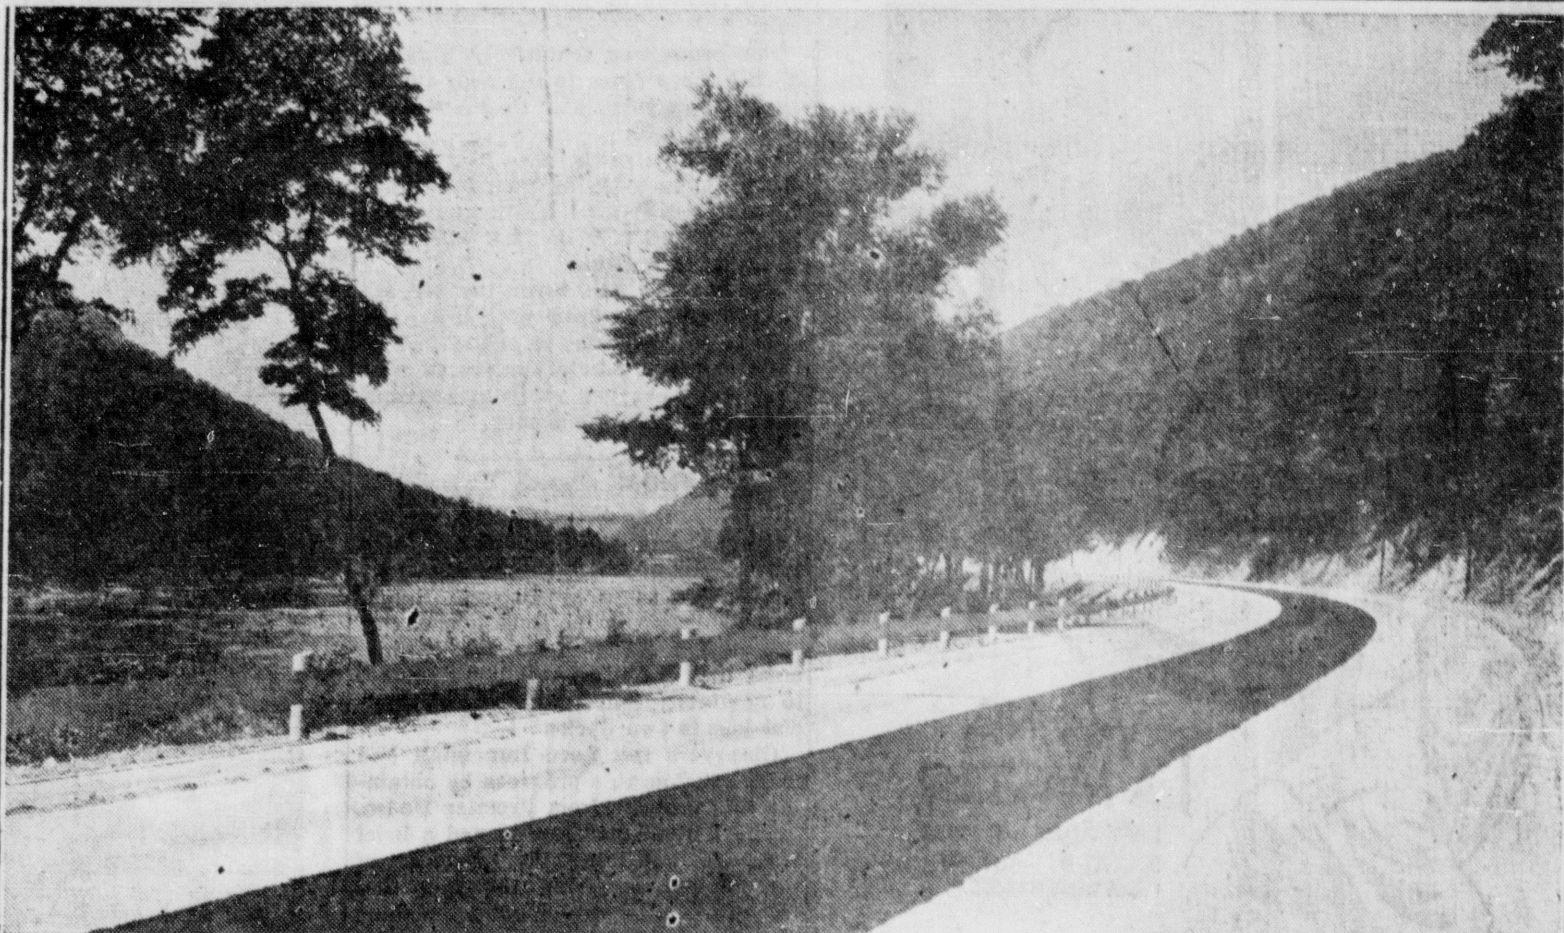

Beauty is the immediate and all-inclusive definition for "Always Goodbye," one of the finest in the chain of excellent 20th Century-Fox productions.

Seldom does a story such as the one which unfolded on the screen of the Grand Theatre yesterday come to the attention of the fans with as much understanding and fine sense of the value of dramatic minutiae.

In the capable hands of co-stars Barbara Stanwyck and Herbert Marshall and under the fine touch of Sidney Lanfield's direction, "Always Goodbye" acquires the beauty of sheer simplicity in a story that is—on several occasions—conducive to a lump in the throat.

Setting a beautiful tale of modern mother love before a kaleidoscopic background of occasional grimness, sporadic sorrow and vivacious, resplendent gowns on Fifth Avenue and in Paris, the film scintillates with the many facets of love that comes to its characters.

Broad Highway Through Lewistown Narrows

A modern three-lane highway now carries motorists through beautiful Lewistown Narrows—famous for a century as a major gateway to the west. Originally a tortuous trail over which stagecoaches and Conestoga wagons rumbled, the highway is a favorite with tourists seeking roadside beauty.
